

Motivational Interviewing Overview (one day)

Motivational Interviewing (MI), a model of therapeutic approach developed by William R. Miller and Stephen Rollnick, is an effective evidenced based approach to help people examine their road blocks to change. Having identified ambivalence as the primary barrier to change, MI spirit and techniques are utilized to assist the individual in examining what they want and what they currently do that might be preventing them from having it.

While MI was born in the field of addictions, it has proven effective in all forms of therapies with individuals. Learning strategies for building motivation, strengthening commitment to change, responding to resistance, enhancing the client's confidence and working within the client's readiness to change will enhance a clinician's skills in working with people. This two day seminar will prepare the participants to learn the spirit and philosophical approach of Motivational Interviewing and to practice some of its basic techniques.

This training is open to anyone who wishes to learn more about Motivational Interviewing. Professionals from the fields of social work, EAP, education, and mental health may all benefit.
